Red Army Cracks Main Nazi Line in White Russia

Five Troopships Sunk by Soviets

By JAMES M. LONG

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 4 (AP)—The Red army cracked the Prone river line twenty-eight miles east of Mogilev in White Russia yesterday, Moscow announced early today, while Soviet airmen sank five troop-filled German boats apparently trying to evacuate the final Nazi rearguard from the enemy's battered foothold in the Caucasus opposite the Crimea.

Smash Across Prone

A midlevel supplement to the regular Soviet communiqué said the Russians had smashed across the Prone, threatening to turn the army's upper Dnieper defense line, and hurled the Germans "into a hasty retreat" in central White Russia.

More than 2,000 Germans were killed and several villages seized in the drive toward Mogilev and Gomel to the south, said the bulletin. The Caucasian campaign campaign was in its last stage. Berlin's high command admitted the loss of Staro-Tamanskaya, virtually the last Axis foothold on the Kerch peninsula east of the Crimea, and the Russians said their airmen killed hundreds of German troops in that area, ashore and at sea.

Three Barges Destroyed

Three barges and several motor boats filled with Germans and six trucks were destroyed, the communiqué said, and three Nazi companies dispersed or annihilated. The Soviet airmen also struck the center of the Crimea, a radio broadcast said, touching off twenty-five explosions amid night air raids with enemy war equipment at the Dzhankoi junction.

Dhankoi is on the line running westward out of the Crimea to Kherson—the last available Nazi escape route by land from the peninsula. The other railway running north to Melitopol already is under Soviet artillery fire, and the latest Russian aerial announcement and three German troop trains were wrecked at Melitopol.

Counter-attacks Fail

The Russians acknowledged fierce German counter-attacks in their semi-encirclement of Gomel, but these were beaten down. In addition to 1,200 enemy troops reported killed in that sector during the day, Moscow said 120 prisoners were taken.

Heavy Fighting Reported

Berlin, however, continued to tell of heavy fighting along the central Dnieper, the high command declaring its army had "succeeded in further narrowing the enemy wedgehead," inflicting heavy losses on the attacking Red army.

This announcement did not make clear whether the Soviet bridgehead was on the eastern or western bank, but a propaganda broadcast located the fighting in the Dnepropetrovsk sector and said that numerous Russian attempts to cross the Western bank had been frustrated.

"Golden Age of Coal" Predicted in Bituminous Institute Report

NEW YORK, Oct. 2 (AP)—A "golden age of coal" was predicted for postwar days by the Bituminous Coal Institute in a survey announced today.

Harry M. Vawter, institute director, said the industry's postwar planning was of a two-fold nature, that to join other groups in the development of a program to enable private industry to function on a peace-time level, and second, research for uses of bituminous coal and its by-products.

"Bituminous coal is the source of forty-nine per cent of the mechanical energy produced in the United States," Vawter said, adding that bituminous coal reserves were sufficient for 3,000 years as compared to estimates by authorities that known petroleum reserves were sufficient for only fifteen years, and natural gas reserves for thirty-two years. Supreme Court Convenes Today With Big Docket

Important Cases Await Decision

By JAMES W. DOUTHAT

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—With 400 cases already docketed, the supreme court will open tomorrow its new 1943-44 term that is expected to produce far-reaching decisions on a variety of wartime litigation.

Some of the outstanding cases awaiting action involve the application of the draft act to conscientious objectors, the constitutional issue of federal rent control regulations, and the right of a negro to vote in a state primary which nominates candidates for Congress.

More Cases Daily

More cases are arriving daily to occupy the court's attention during the next eight months. It has been in recess since June 21.

There has been no change in the membership of the court since last February 15, when Justice Wiley Rutledge succeeded James P. Byrnes, who had resigned in October to become economic stabilization director.

Only one member of the court—Chief Justice Stone, who will be 71 on October 11—is eligible to retire at full pay because of having reached the age of 70 and having served ten years on the bench. He still is going strong.

New Court Crier

One change is in prospect for tomorrow's session. There will be a new crier to intone "oyez! oyez!" when the justices march into the chamber. He is John A. Kenning, 17 years old, of Germantown, Pa. He succeeds T. Perry Lippitt, 27, who is in the navy. Lippitt also was assistant marshal.

The program for the session consists only of the admission of attorneys to practice before the tribunal and the receipt of motions. The customary call at the White House at the opening of a new term will take place when an appointment can be arranged.

Several conferences of the justices will be held this week to decide which cases filed during the summer will be reviewed and which will be denied a review. The announcement will be made the following Monday. Oral arguments also will begin then of cases which the tribunal agreed last spring to review.

SENATE TO CONSIDER CONDUCT OF WAR IN SECRET SESSIONS

Final Peace Terms Also To Come Up Soon In Considering Report of Investigators

By FRANCIS J. KELLY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—A spokesman for the Senate's "round-the-world war inspection committee" disclosed today that matters likely to effect the immediate conduct of the war as well as the drafting of final peace terms will be laid before the chamber in secret session Wednesday.

While disclaiming any intention of trying to direct strategic operations from Capitol Hill, this source declared that the eyes of the flying lawmakers were opened in many ways and that the information they gained must be shared promptly with the ninety-one senators who stayed home.

Facts Kept Secret

"I think it is important that the Senate have this background, although some of the matters should not be broadcast to the world at large," he said. "After all, the winning of the war transcends every other consideration."

Although the delegation will make its report behind guarded doors, high administration quarters intent on further cementing relations with our Allies displayed some agitation that the discussions would take too frank a tone which later might be reflected in open debate.

The committee spokesman declared, however, that no pressure had been put on the senators to soft-pedal their remarks.

Want British Oil

In press conferences and on the Senate floor, the four members of the five-man committee who have returned to Washington have advised securing postwar landing rights on airports built abroad with United States funds and diversion of a greater proportion of oil for the United war effort from British-controlled fields along the Persian gulf.

Other problems involving military and lend-lease operations also are expected to be aired in the executive session.

Report Germans Stealing Many Fine Paintings

Art Masterpieces Removed by Nazis

NEW YORK, Oct. 3 (AP)—Georges Wildenstein, an art expert of Paris and New York, said today a great treasure hunt would be necessary after the war to recover millions of dollars in art masterpieces stolen by the Nazis from collectors in occupied Europe.

Many paintings, sculpture, furniture, tapestries and porcelain have gone into private collections of high Nazi officials. Wildenstein declared in a statement, while others have been scattered through public auction sales.

Would Forbid Removals

"I believe that one of the decrees of the peace should be to forbid the removal of art works from any part of Europe and to declare a moratorium on all transactions in paintings, sculpture and other art objects," he said.

He also recommended that proof of ownership before 1936 be required of all Germans, Italians and neutrals in Europe possessing art objects of value. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 6)

Allied Advances Spell Jap Doom, Says MacArthur

Seizure of Bases Frees Large Area

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN THE SOUTHWEST PACIFIC, Monday, Oct. 4 (AP)—General Douglas MacArthur, in a review today of the Northeastern New Guinea campaign, said that capture of Finshhafen has eliminated all defensive value of enemy-held centers to the north and west as far as Madang.

By seizure of the air and naval base on the Eastern coast of the Huon peninsula, he said, the Allies not only have gained complete control of the Huon gulf but have obliged the Japanese to withdraw toward rear bases on the North shore of New Guinea.

Finshhafen was taken Saturday by veteran Australian troops to culminate a ten-day campaign during which the position was surrounded effectively from its three land flanks and the Japanese defenders were trapped with their backs to the sea.

Japs Taken By Surprise

This enveloping movement caught the Japanese by surprise, the general said, and as a result they lost heavily. Allied casualties in comparison were described as light.

A forced withdrawal by the enemy to Madang as a result of Allied domination of the Huon Peninsula through the occupation of Finshhafen would mean abandoning nearly 150 miles of coast—virtually the entire New Guinea shoreline of Vitiaz Strait.

Awareness of this eventuality on the part of the Japanese command may have dictated the fierce resistance put up by the Finshhafen garrison in the week before it was overrun Saturday.

As against the comparative collapse and flight of the much stronger enemy force at Lae, seized some two weeks earlier, the Japanese marines at Finshhafen fought almost to the last man before bowing to the Australians' bristling bayonets.

Three Bases Taken

The campaign to eliminate the enemy from the seventy-five mile wide Huon gulf, began June 30 with the landing of Allied forces at Nasau Bay, on its southwestern shore. Three Japanese bases were the prime objectives, and each fell in turn over the course of twenty days.

Salamaia, most southerly of the three, was the first to be taken. It was invested Sept. 12 by joint forces moving northward along the coast and eastward from inland positions.

Lae, twenty miles farther north, was enveloped Sept. 16 by airborne forces moving down the Markham valley to the northwest and seaborne troops landed on the shore of the gulf twenty miles to the east.

The same pincer operations then was applied against Finshhafen, sixty miles east of Lae, and that anchorage and air station was overwhelmed Oct. 2.

Advance on Madang

Describing the success of the campaign against the enemy's coastal holdings, General MacArthur said in his communiqué that it was supported strongly by a concurrent cross-country advance through interior New Guinea in the direction of Madang itself.

"The simultaneous air and ground movement of 200 miles from Port Moresby through the center of inland New Guinea gives us control of the entire Huon peninsula," he commented.

"It has outflanked and contained all enemy centers between Finshhafen and Madang." (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

New Taxes on Luxuries: Liquor, Beer, Soft Drinks, Smokes Appear Likely To Cost Much More

By FRANCIS M. LEMAY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—The administration will ask Congress tomorrow to put the so-called luxuries of life—such as liquor, beer, pop, gum, tobacco and traveling—on an all-out war footing, by unprecedented increases in tax rates.

By these rates, to be proposed before the House Ways and Means committee by Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau, the tax on one drink of liquor would be 12½ cents. Total is $10,650,000,000.

This is a part of the administration's program to add $10,650,000,000 to the present annual revenue collection rate of $38,239,000,000. It will embrace suggestions for sharp increases in individual and corporate income rates as well as in excise taxes. Of the $10,650,000,000, the treasury would refund $3,580,000,000 to individual taxpayers after the war.

After preliminary discussions with Morgenthau, members of Congress today outlined the administration program as follows:

1. Individual incomes—rates to be raised so as to produce an additional $6,610,000,000 annually, including the postwar refundable $3,580,000,000. The present twenty per cent withholding levy against the taxable portions of wages and salaries would be graduated upward, possibly to a rate of thirty per cent for some incomes. The individual exemptions for married persons would be pared from $1,200 to $1,100; exemption for single persons would remain at $500; and dependents reduced from $350 to $300. The Truth from Berlin: Goebbels Tells Germans They Must Reckon upon Some Severe Setbacks

By ELTON C. FAY

Associated Press War Analyst. Occasionally Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels lapses into the truth.

The Nazi propaganda minister told the German people yesterday, in talking about Allied air raids, that "we must reckon upon severe setback in the future." Raids during the past few weeks, he said, have slackened because of adverse weather.

Improved weather is only one of the factors which will make the doctor's prediction come true.

Allied Power Growing

First among the others is the steady day-by-day, week-by-week growth of Anglo-American bomber power. Along with that factor (and in a large measure because of it) there is a corresponding deterioration of the Nazis' defense against attack from the skies. The pounding that the ground defenses take from the British and American raiders blast away anti-aircraft gun positions, destroy aircraft detector units and paralyze fire combatting systems. And in the air, the heavily armed bombers, sometimes escorted

U. S. Marauders Bomb Germany's Major Airfields

Munich Attacked By R.A.F. Fliers

By ROBERT STURDEVANT

LONDON, Oct. 3 (AP)—United States Marauder bombers assaulted enemy airfields in France and Holland without loss today following a heavy RAF attack on Munich last night less than forty-eight hours after the Nazi party's birthplace was blasted by Africa-based American Flying Fortresses.

The air ministry and United States military headquarters announced the Marauders bombed the airfields at Woensdrecht, Haamstede and Amsterdam-Schiphol in Holland this morning and the Beauvais-Tille airfield in France late this afternoon.

Escorting RAF, Dominion and Allied fighters shot down fourteen enemy fighters, to the loss of two Spitfires.

Most-Bombed Airfield

The Beauvais-Tille airfield, about forty-five miles north of Paris, is the most-bombed airfield in France, having been attacked nine times in the last thirty days.

United States P-47 Thunderbolts also swept over Northern France and Belgium, it was announced. The Paris radio said the "Anglo-American airforce" bombed the southeastern suburbs of Paris during the afternoon.

German-controlled radio fell silent tonight, indicating the possibility of nocturnal raids. United States government monitors reported that among those that went off the air were the stations at Bremen; Calais, France; and Priesland, Holland.

Five hundred tons of bombs were rained on Munich in a twenty-five-hour attack. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 3)

Nazi Submarine Crews Revolting In Large Numbers

Morale Cracking, Reports Declare

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 3 (AP)—New reports from Norway confirm previous rumors of declining morale and mutinous tendencies among German submarine crews in Far Northern Norway, a Norwegian legation statement said today.

Townpeople in Tromsø, one of the largest U-boat bases in Norway and one used extensively since the Flying Fortress raid of July 24 on the Trondheim base, were quoted as saying that "discipline is very bad and the marines seem to neglect their officers completely when they are ashore."

Fighting in States

"In the middle of the night, heavy fighting between U-boat officers and their marines can often be seen in the streets," the statement continued.

Reports of mutiny of submarine crews and marines at Tromsø came as the undersea boats resumed their preying on Allied shipping after a summer lay-off.

Fifth and Eighth Armies Gaining In Double Drive

Benevento Taken By Allied Troops

By EDWARD KENNEDY

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS, Algiers, Oct. 3 (AP)—Allied Fifth army troops have struck up to the German river line northeast of Naples by entering Benevento, while the British Eighth Army plunging up the famous road of conquerors has lopped off a wide area on the Adriatic side of Italy, it was announced today.

The Germans have pulled back from the entire Melfi salient in the central sector, official reports disclosed.

Dominates Valley

Benevento, thirty-two miles northeast of Naples, is high in the mountains on the main lateral road and railroad running from the big port, and dominates the valley of the Volturno river. It is along these rivers that the Nazis have been expected to make a stand against the Allied advance.

Details of the thrust into this vital town were not disclosed, but American units of the fifth army were last reported at Avellino 15 miles to the south. The road from Avellino to Benevento runs through the twisting mountain valley of the Sabato river.

In Corsica, Moroccan Goumiers and sharpshooters seized Teghime Hill, the "Key to Bastia," after beating off violent counter-attacks and now hold the whole ridge dominating Bastia and biguigla lake, a French communiqué announced.

Corsica Nearly Cleared

French shock troops and American Rangers closed in on the Bastia area in nearby sectors, routing several German detachments and pushing to the northern point of Cap Corse. All Corsica thus has been cleared of Nazis except for a strip along the East coast from the area of Cervino to Luri on Cap Corse.

Fifty army armored units made contact with deploying Nazi elements along Italy's west coast just north of Naples. Meanwhile AMG (Allied military government) officials strove to get the wrecked city of Naples back to some semblance of normal life, and engineers rushed repairs to the heavily damaged port.

The front line now runs from Naples to Benevento, to Frigento, and almost due north to the mouth of the Fortore river on the Adriatic coast.

Great Area Chopped Off

A great area was chopped off by the collapse of the enemy's Melfi salient. Towns occupied here by the right wing of the Fifth army and by the Eighth army along the Adriatic include Valtorta, Monteleone, Bisaccari, Orsara, Savignano, Torremaggiore, Lucera, Aprincent, Boscia, Grottole, and Lesciano.

The Adriatic coastal road leads to the Emilia way, running into the heart of the Po valley. There are no high mountains there such as would face the Fifth Army north of Rome, but the Germans surely would not leave this door into the strategic Po Valley open, and undoubtedly are planning a stand somewhere between the Fortore river and Rimini, where the Po valley opens like a fan.

German Sea and Air Forces Attack Island of Coo in the Aegean Sea

By LYNN HEINZLING

CAIRO, Oct. 3 (AP)—Germany unleashed a sea and air-borne attack against newly won Allied positions on the island of Coo in the narrow Aegean sea today, striking back in her defense of Europe in a new theater—the ancient battle-lanes of the Athenians and the Spartans.

A terse British announcement of the air and amphibious attack on Allied-held Coo, second largest island in the Italian Dodecanese group, added the cryptic statement: "Necessary countermeasures have been taken by the defending forces."

Not on Large Scale

Immediate information on the progress of the fighting and the size of the attacking force Germany was able to draw from her strained reserves was lacking, but it was not believed here that an assault had yet been launched on a large scale.

Coo and its excellent airfield were seized by British parachute troops and seaborne forces on Sept. 22 along with Lero in the Dodecanese group on the Greek island of Samos to the north.

The Sunday morning attack was the first evidence that Germany was preparing seriously to contest the Allied advance up the Aegean island stepping stones to Greece, although repeated Nazi air raids have been made on Coo since the Allied occupation.

Small Sea Forces

Any sea forces the Germans mustered in the Aegean for today's attack necessarily were small, since they are forced to rely on surface craft captured from the Greeks and Italians or hastily constructed after occupation.

Child Is Born To Joan Berry

Charges Chaplin With Paternity

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 3 (AP)—Joan Berry, 23, has given birth to a six-pound, five-ounce baby girl, whose father she claims is Charles Chaplin, movie comedian. Both mother and child, whom he named Carol Ann, were reported doing well.

The baby was born at 10:30 last night, announced Miss Berry's mother, Mrs. Gertrude E. Berry of New York. The expectant mother was admitted to the hospital early yesterday.

Shortly after the birth, the infant's footprints were taken on legal documents. When the child is four months old, blood tests will be made in an effort to determine whether or not Chaplin is the father.

Last June 3, Mrs. Berry filed suit against the 54-year-old English pantomimist on behalf of the unborn child, "John Doe Chaplin," asking $10,000 for medical care, $2,500 monthly support and $5,000 for lawyer and court fees.

Although denying paternity, Chaplin agreed to pay $15,000 for lawyers' fees, birth expenses and blood tests. If his parenthood is established the suit will be returned to superior court.

Five days after the settlement, the film actor eloped to Santa Barbara to marry his fourth wife, Oona O'Neill, 18-year-old daughter of playwright Eugene O'Neill.

Goebbels Tells

by long-range fighters, take a growing toll of the enemy's fighter plane strength.

Air bases from which big raids can be launched are being pushed closer to the war plants and transportation routes of the Nazis' inner fortress. While England-based raiders give the western and central enemy-territory continuous poundings, new bomber bases appear in captured Mediterranean islands and follow the armies north along the Italian peninsula.

Problem for Germans

The expanding Allied bomber power, the diminishing German air defenses and the closing ring of bomber bases are existing factors which Goebbels must reckon with, even if he prefers to invoke only the weather in his explanation.

Perhaps he should give some attention, too, to recent reports from London concerning a forthcoming American-British-Soviet staff discussion in advance of the three-power diplomatic meeting.

Any meeting of spokesmen for the high military commands of the three great powers is certain to include discussion of use and disposition of that formidable arm of war, aviation. The question of fundamental air war policies must be involved.

Russia's Problem Different

The Russians to date have exhibited no extreme enthusiasm over the value of the Anglo-American strategic bombing. It has been suggested that this attitude is explained by the fact that the Soviet aviation problem is somewhat different than that of Russia's western allies.

Russia, like Germany, originally built her air force mainly for the purpose of tactical bombing—the hammering of the enemy's actual fighting line and the supply routes at and not very far back of the front. Aviation, used that way, is super-long-range artillery, assigned to the primary task of aiding ground forces.

Germany, unlike Russia, however, departed at one stage from the fundamental policy of tactical air war and built bombers for the specific job of blasting English cities and morale. The bomber branch of the Luftwaffe blasted cities for a time but failed in the morale-reducing enterprise.

End of Blitzkriegs

When the blitzkrieg phase of the war in western Europe ended because there was no more territory to blitzkrieg with armored forces covered by an air umbrella, Germany still needed tactical aviation for the war in North Africa and much more urgently, for the operations on the Eastern front.

And since the Allies opened their all-out air bombardment of Nazi war plant cities, the Luftwaffe finds fighter plane defense even more vital than tactical operations with ground forces.

Russia, however, has adhered to a basic policy of tactical aviation, making comparatively few long distance forays. Except for one instance, the good targets for strategic bombing have been far removed from Russian bases. The exception is Rumania and its oil fields. American bombers recently battled their way over enemy territory to the Ploesti fields where they knocked out seventy-two per cent of the refineries, but at heavy loss to themselves.

It seems possible, therefore, that when the Anglo-American military chiefs sit down with the Soviet army men there may be some disposition on their part to inquire if Russia might consider adoption of a strategic bombing program.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Oct. 3 (AP)—Camp Grant, a 10 to 7 winner a week ago over Wisconsin on a field goal in the final minute of play, scored a touchdown today with less than two minutes left to tie Marquette, 7 to 7, before 10,000 civilian and soldier spectators.

End Bill Huber scored the camp Grant touchdown in spectacular fashion, grabbing a thirty-three-yard pass from Bill Reed on the ten-yard line, wrestling for the ball a few seconds with a Marquette defender, and then taking firm hold of it to run the remaining ten yards across the goal.

Jews Risk Death

yet available. Unofficially, however, it was estimated that at least 1,100 have reached Sweden since rumors of the purge swept through Denmark a week ago.

Feeling Runs High

The Swedish government predicted in a formal note to the German foreign office in Berlin that "serious repercussions" would be felt in Sweden, and feeling ran high, especially in Southern Sweden which once was a part of Denmark.

The Swedish government offer to accept the deportees did not include 2,000 Jews who fled Germany, Austria and other countries and obtained refuge in Denmark early in the war.

Germany's reply was to send boatloads of Jews from Copenhagen apparently to Baltic ports.

Sweden, now strongly mobilized and in a better position than at any time in its history to back up words with force if necessary, already had officially expressed sympathy for Norway by halting traffic of German troops and war material on Swedish railways between Germany and Norway.

The Danish news service reported last night that at least 1,600 Danish Jews had been rounded up so far by the Germans.

The roundup started Friday night after all telephone communications had been cut in Copenhagen by the Nazis in an effort to frustrate attempts of the Jews to warn each other that SS troops and Gestapo agents were engaging in large scale arrests.

However, as the Nazis made the rounds they found that many Jews had fled.

Jews arrested included babies and persons to the age of 90. Even a Jewish home for the aged was raided.

The purge of the Jews gave the Germans a scapegoat to blame for failure to control even with a military dictatorship, the widespread sabotage and passive resistance by the Danes.

Denmark had been under German martial law since Aug. 29, when Nazi Gen. Hermann von Hanneken ousted the government of Prime Minister Erik D. Scavenius, and virtually imprisoned King Christian X.

Boy, Nine, Fatally Shot by Playmate

BETHESDA, Md., Oct. 3 (AP)—The fatal wounding of 9-year-old Barrymore D. Riggs by a rifle in the hands of a playmate was officially listed by Dr. F. J. Brochart, Montgomery county coroner, as an accidental death.

Funeral services for the boy, the son of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Riggs formerly of Frederick, Md., will be held at the home on Bradley lane at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Police said the accident happened Friday in the basement of the home of Thomas P. Queen, 10, who lived on Cedar Lane, a about a half mile from the Riggs residence.

The Queen boy, officers said, discovered a rifle which had been left in the basement and pointed it at his playmate. The weapon went off and the bullet struck the Riggs boy behind the ear.

The Maryland 4-H Club judging contest will be staged as one of the traditional features of the event, but the banquet and the inter-collegiate judging contest were eliminated.

The 4-H contest between groups of farm boys from various counties will be held tomorrow immediately following inspection of all fat cattle. The event is considered by county agents to be essential in training youths.

Former Frederick Reporter Killed

FREDERICK, Md., Oct. 3 (AP)—Ensign James William Schwartz, 25, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Schwartz of Frederick and a former reporter on the Post, was killed late yesterday in an airplane crash at Corpus Christi, Tex., his parents said today.

No details were given in the Navy department's notification.

Ensign Schwartz is the second Post reporter in the armed forces to have been killed, both in airplane crashes. The first was William T. Delaplaine, 3rd, lieutenant in the navy air corps. He was killed in a plane crash in California.

New York Policemen Mop Up Evidence

NEW YORK, Oct. 3 (AP)—Two resourceful policemen mopped up their case today and literally wrung out the evidence.

Investing a complaint that a woman was selling liquor without a license in her Bronx apartment, they called on her. The woman admitted them, and then casually brushed against some bottles on the window sill. The bottles hurled to the courtyard pavement.

The cops grabbed dustcloths and a milkbottle, sopped up what liquid they could, wrung it into the bottle and brought the evidence to court where the woman was held in $500 bail for a hearing Friday.

More than fifty of the barges were sunk or damaged during the last week of September.

Gatch Challenges Big Nazi Warship To Duel at Sea

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—Rear Admiral Thomas Leigh Gatch let it be known today that he would bet on his battleship South Dakota if the Germans wanted to use the Admiral Tirpitz in a duel.

Gatch is the skipper of the 35,000-ton South Dakota, until yesterday known to the world only as the "battleship X" which blew thirty-two attacking Japanese planes out of the air with a hail of gunfire and beat a Japanese warship concentration in a night battle in the Solomons.

"The South Dakota," Gatch asserted in a radio program today, "is the greatest in the world, including the much vaunted Admiral Tirpitz."

Gatch said that the engagement in the Solomons when the Japanese tried to relieve Guadalcanal by use of superior air power "proved that the battleship — with proper air co-ordination — rules the seas."

"I rather think the battleship is here to stay," he declared. "The Japanese, the admiral said, 'build good ships — but every time we've met them on anything like equal terms they've been overwhelmingly defeated. I think we will keep on doing it.'"

Sergeant Found Guilty Of Fixing Enlistments

SELFREDGE FIELD, Mich., Oct. 3 (AP)—A court martial convicted Master Sgt. Myron B. Collins, former acting sergeant major of this army air base and a veteran of nineteen years in the service, of fixing enlistments and transfers for a price in violation of the ninety-sixth article of war today.

Collins was sentenced to eighteen months of hard labor and dishonorable discharge from the army. His case, like the case of five former superiors including Col. William T. Colman, former Selfridge commandant found guilty of careless use of firearms, is subject to review by higher military authority.

Collins's case was briefest of the six, occupying the court martial which heard it for less than a day. Testimony began only this morning.

The former sergeant major was convicted of seven charges of misconduct. These counts included acceptance of a diamond ring, jeweled watch, $300 in cash and the use of an automobile from George K. Luffy, Detroit, father of two enlisted men at Selfridge Field, and the use of a cabin cruiser from Mrs. Ella Pressel, also of Detroit, the mother of a third soldier Collins was accused of favoring.

the occupation of Greece by Germany and her satellites.

Crete, however, seventy miles south of the Greek mainland and little more than 100 miles below Coo, affords excellent airbases for German thrusts at the Allied island positions.

Allied naval forces have been reported in the Aegean islands from time to time but the position of German-occupied Crete probably would hold Allied surface activity to hit and run operations.

Air activity over the Aegean has grown tremendously in the last months.

A well-dressed air for socials!

Social life is curtailed these days. This makes it more important than ever that when you do see your friends, you should look your best. Clothes that are cleaned often can put in a good appearance no matter what the occasion. Dine with friends or have your book club over in the evening — you will feel well-dressed if you are wearing a freshly cleaned outfit.

Berlin broadcasts also indicated that twelve Soviet divisions still were attacking in the Zaporozhe sector below Dnepropetrovsk in an attempt to break through to the mainland approaches to the Crimea.

The fall of Staro-Tamanskaya in the Caucasus left the Germans only a few miles of untenable marshes on the peninsula opposite the Crimea. Staro-Tamanskaya is ten miles across the strait from the Crimean port of Kerch, which already is under Soviet air attacks.

The freeing of the Caucasus and the Soviet attacks near Zaporozhe apparently foreshadowed an early Soviet attempt to liberate the Crimea by a pincers movement. A Soviet break-through across the Middle Dnieper also would imperil Nazi garrisons there.

The Russian bulletin, recorded by the Soviet monitor, said twenty Russian hamlets were seized in the drive on Gomel, and fifty overrun in the push toward Mogilev.

Report Germans

The Rothschild family alone lost almost $100,000,000 worth of masterpieces to the Germans. Wildenstein asserted among them Rubens' portrait of his wife, child and self; "The Astronomer" by Vermeer; a famous Gainsborough portrait valued at $250,000; Rembrandt's "Man at the Window" and "Standard Bearer," and Goya's "Women on a Balcony."

Both Hitler and Goering have large collections of confiscated works, he continued, adding that Goering now possesses "The Adoration of the Lamb," a Polyptych by Jan and Hubert Van Eyck which was taken from the Ghent cathedral in Belgium.

Wildenstein said "the monumental task of tracing rightful ownership appears almost insurmountable unless a careful plan is developed."

Nazi Submarine

Mutiny also had been reported among Nazi crews in Norway after the Allied anti-submarine warfare took a heavy toll of submarines in the spring and early summer.

It was reported on June 26 that six crews had refused to go to sea and that 200 officers and men had been sent to prison at Oslo.

German naval officers have taken extraordinary steps to control morale, shifting crews frequently to duty on warships, but the shortage of trained men for the huge Nazi submarine fleet requires that marines spend long periods at sea.

Another rubber company official said the manpower shortage also has been a serious handicap.

The bride, in a gown of white satin, was attended by Miss Margaret Domney, who wore pink taffeta. Sgt. Gabe Rice, a close friend of Sgt. Cramer, served as best man. The Rev. George Nichols, curate of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, officiated.

A reception followed the ceremony at the conclusion of which Sgt. and Mrs. Cramer came to Meyersdale to visit relatives and friends during a brief furlough. Sgt. Cramer is stationed at West Point, N. Y.

What World Police Force or Power?

ONE of the toughest nuts this nation will have to crack when peace comes is determination of what may be necessary to back up responsible participation by the sovereign nations in a plan to prevent military aggression and attain a permanent peace.

Republican leaders at Mackinac Island expressed the belief that peace and security could be maintained upon other sanctions than force, and stressed the factors of inherent reciprocal interests and spiritual foundation.

Not long after that Secretary Hull sought to fill the omission obtaining on the administration side by making a radio address which was in considerable accord with the Republican objective.

Later the House of Representatives adopted the Fulbright resolution, which favors appropriate international machinery "with power" adequate to establish and maintain a just and lasting peace.

Recently the American Legion in its national convention favored much the same thing "implemented with whatever force may be necessary" and here this could mean several things, although implying realistic opportunism.

Thus the question of an international police force has not been answered, and only in partial manner by its advocates. What they talk about is a permanent organization of a kind of international army, which of course, would have to be supported by a few great powers, and which would operate in such a way as to make everything serene and lovely.

At any rate, the main objective of all is that such an organization shall be established as will make aggression quite uninteresting for any nation. To attain it will require all the skill, brains, vision, understanding and caution possible; and it is palpable that a definite formula cannot be arrived at until the war-end situation with its varied conditions, now unforeseen, is discernable.

A Rich Postwar Market but There's a Catch to It

IN A SURVEY of postwar consumer market prospects the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has found that on the whole the nation is beginning to think in optimistic terms of full employment and continued prosperity.

Within six months after peace comes the chamber estimates that Americans will be wanting to buy 1,540,000 homes, 3,675,000 automobiles, 2,625,000 mechanical refrigerators, 2,555,000 radios, 2,100,000 washing machines and a host of other major household appliances.

Roughly speaking, the report showed that American families plan to spend in excess of $20,000,000,000 in the immediate postwar market on cars, homes, household equipment and other items which have been denied by the necessities of war. That the survey is a conservative one is easily demonstrated by the fact that the estimate for the number of automobiles which will be demanded in the immediate postwar period is less than the number of passenger cars built in 1941 and in seven other years since 1925.

According to the survey, the greatest single expenditure—more than $7,000,000,000—planned by American families after the war is in new homes. More than half of these are to be homes costing less than $5,000 each.

There is indeed a rich market, but there is a catch to it. It will not be possible, for example, to construct the sort of homes most Americans want to buy if construction costs are kept at today's high level as a result of opposition to cost-lowering mass production techniques, nor if taxes bear too heavily upon individuals and business.

This could easily result in the stifling of a potentially vast market. New homes have to be furnished and if production is to be limited other enterprises will inevitably be adversely affected.

The obstacle only underlines the necessity for postwar planning to make sure that every ounce of the nation's energy is utilized in a spurt of production that will banish the twin specters of mass unemployment and inflation which could wreck America's hope in the future.

Daltons Are Needed In the Political Arena

THERE SHOULD BE a political future in this country for that plane navigator who went to the trouble of apologizing to the taxpayers after his plane was shot down. The nation can use men like him in the realm of public affairs.

Lieut. J. W. Dalton, of Vineland, N. J., had been a bookkeeper in a Jersey bank before he went to war. In a letter to his parents, the J. Ward Daltons, he asked them to convey his apologies to the taxpayers for losing a new plane and promised that it would not happen again.

Lieut. Dalton's thoughts apparently were concentrated on the taxpayers' interest in the accident, because he said little in his letter of the fact that the crew of the plane was adrift in a rubber boat sixty miles from the English coast and was lucky to be rescued.

"We are still mad about losing that airplane—it sure was a good one," Lieut. Dalton said. "Tell the taxpayers we're sorry . . . it won't happen again."

A man with the spirit of Lieut. Dalton is likely to keep his word. So, if and when he enters the political arena after the war, a new era will have dawned in American politics, an era in which the politician thinks of the taxpayers first and himself afterward.

Permanent Regimentation

PATERNALISM IN GOVERNMENT must be abolished. Having survived a great depression and war, this nation cannot be expected to weather another emergency if we follow the same course of excessive spending and taxing. These are the statements of W. Linn Hemingway, president of the American Bankers Association.

"A continuation of government deficits coupled with bureaucratic control of the daily lives of our people," Hemingway said, "can only lead to state socialism and dictatorship, the very thing we are fighting to destroy in other lands. We already have instances of the encroachment of government on the private enterprise system under the guise of emergency in the establishment of government lending agencies. There is danger of these becoming permanent."

Thus we have another group of citizens voicing the common fear that regimentation, a process of war, may become a fixture in the future economy of this nation.

The Browser's Bookshelf

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Wes Gallagher's "Back Door to Berlin" (Doubleday Doran) is a good, straightaway, clearly written story of the bouncing of the Germans and Italians out of North Africa . . . the first full story of that great coup which began with the landing of the first American army in Africa at Dakar and along the African coast and ended with the defeat and flight of the Germans.

That great victory made possible the capture of Sicily and the invasion of Italy; it was the victory that tarnished Rommel, cost Hitler his Afrika Korps and nearly half a million men, opened up the Mediterranean to allied shipping, freed Britain's best army—the Eighth—for new tasks and gave precious experiences to the American ground forces and air men. It restored the soul of the French, delivered a smashing defeat to the Luftwaffe.

Wes Gallagher tells the story, if not with brilliance at least with great clarity and capability. He came out of it with a cracked spine, received after the capture of Bizerte, just when he was beginning to have some grim enjoyment out of the campaign—because it was the first time in three years of war that he had the chance of following in the trail of a victorious army.

A good book about history in the making. A timely book indeed is Random House's publication of Karl von Clausewitz's great treatise "On War," written a century and a quarter ago by a German soldier who never saw his principles put into practice. The Germans claim that they are the only ones who understand Clausewitz's ideas and are able to put them fully into practice. If you read this book you may come to the conclusion that they are the one warlike nation that most capably expounds in practice his ideas on how to lose a war! Defense, he believed, is the stronger form of making war, but the defense must be strong and neither the attacker nor the defender must forget that "a swift and vigorous transition to attack—is the most brilliant point of the defensive."

Clausewitz never forgot Napoleon's defeat in Russia and writes in 1830: "If the Russians had to undertake the defense of their country over again, under exactly the same circumstances, they would do voluntarily and systematically what in great part was done without a definite plan in 1812." This form of defeat involves stubborn retreat, lengthening of the enemies supply lines through unfavorable country, then smashing attack.

Therese Bonney, the famous photographer, has published "Europe's Children," a heart-breaking collection of photographs that show the tragedy that has involved the boys and girls of the lands across the sea.

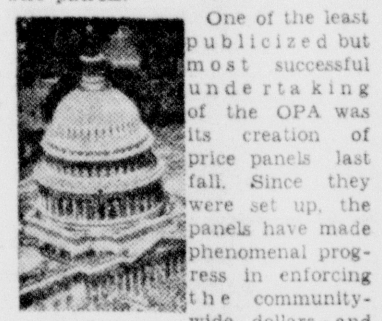

Harry Paxton Howard's "America's Role in Asia" (Howell Soskin), by a man who worked as an American journalist in Japan and China for twenty-five years, plays no favorites. Honest, candid, informed, it is the best behind-the-scenes book on Asia the Browser has ever read.

More than 300,000 copies of Marquand's "So Little Time" have been printed. The Random House editors think that Paul Hughes' "Retreat from Rostov" is "one of the great books of the time." The Browser, who doesn't understand publishers, still thinks it an odd combination of excitement and absurdity . . . Says Marsh Maslin.

New Police Drive To Hold Prices Is Now Expected

BY CENTRAL PRESS

WASHINGTON—Look for a drive to police OPA ceiling prices of consumer durable goods, consumer services such as shoe repairing and laundry, restaurants, perhaps fuel. It will be conducted by "housewife patrols."

The Capitol

One of the least publicized but most successful undertakings of the OPA was its creation of price panels last fall. Since they were set up, the panels have made phenomenal progress in enforcing the community-wide dollars-and-cents price ceilings established on dry groceries in more than 150 cities throughout the nation.

Three members of each of the country's 6,500 rationing boards constitute a "price panel." These members in turn recruit price panel assistants, volunteers whose jobs it is to check on observance of price ceilings. More than 45,000 stores were contacted in the Boston, Atlanta, New York, Chicago and Cleveland areas.

Ceilings Observed

Results obtained are little short of amazing, OPA claims. In the Atlanta area, which includes the southeastern portion of the United States, from ninety to ninety-four per cent of the retail food stores are complying with the ceilings. In Washington, where violations once were openly flaunted, nearly ninety per cent of the 1,800 groceries now are observing the ceilings.

Clubwomen, housewives, professional and small business men who serve as panel assistants are giving full credit for the success. Most price violations found are settled peacefully at conferences with ration boards. Few cases reach the stage where enforcement actions are filed in the courts.

In Detroit, during one two-week period, 246 complaints were investigated and only two had to be given to enforcement agents.

Mrs. Anne P. Flory, who bosses the show from Washington, is enthusiastic.

"We operate on the premise that the storekeepers are essentially honest and want to comply," she says. "If we didn't we couldn't run this program."

Cynics after Bowles

Some of the old-timers around OPA wonder if Chester Bowles, new general manager, isn't on the wrong track in trying to "popularize" the agency.

They're backing Bowles; want him to succeed. But the cynics say he might appropriately be called "Last Chance" Bowles. In other words, if he fails, OPA is through as a price and rationing body.

However, some of the OPAs are skeptical of the technique being employed by the one-time head of Benton and Bowles, New York advertising firm. Bowles' announced determination is to make OPA acceptable to and popular with the general public. Many of his aides, however, feel this is a misguided effort. They don't believe OPA ever can be popularized, feeling it only needs to be made workable and efficient to succeed.

Past Events Cited

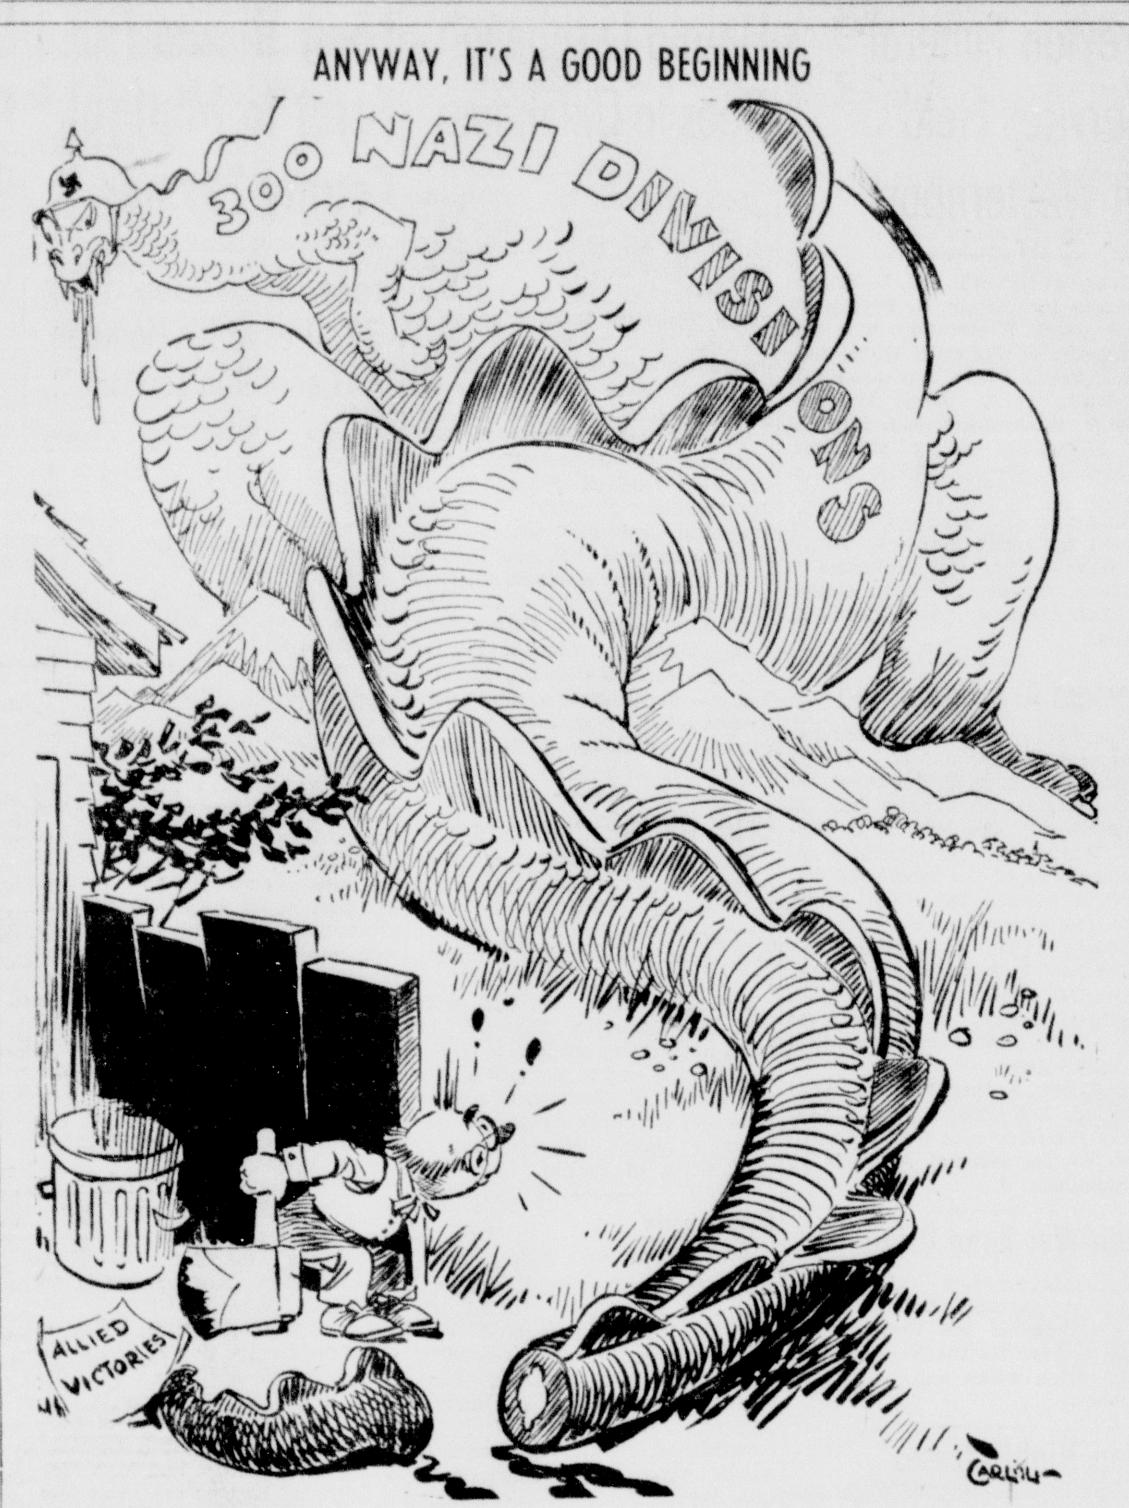

Moreover, they point to past events in support of their argument. Leon Henderson, the initial price boss, was great for making OPA publicly beloved. But he wound up, as he expressed it, "the most unpopular man in the country." Lou Maxon, Detroit advertising executive, had a fling at it, too, brought here by Prentiss Brown of Michigan, an information chief with instructions to make the agency popular with the man-in-the-street. Maxon lasted only a few months before quitting with a blast at the organization and its policies.

Bowles may turn the trick, but he has a lot to overcome. His first big undertaking was a flop. He had planned to go on the radio to "sell" the Midwest on the necessity for reduced gasoline rations. Instead, the story "leaked" in advance; erroneous accounts were published; a "run" started on Midwest filling

Living Problem Posed by Proposed Tax May Doom New Bill, Paul Mallon Says

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3—How the average man will be able to pay a thirty percent withholding tax, put the customary ten per cent into government bonds, and live on six per cent of his earnings or less, is the main stumbling block to the tax problem which the Treasury is pushing off upon Congress Monday.

In some instances, as with government workers, an additional five per cent goes to retirement, meaning that a single worker earning $50 a week would have to pay out $18.90 a week in taxes and live on $31.10 (allowing for the $12 a week basic withholding tax exemption).

Wages have gone up, it is true. The official estimate of average weekly earnings (War Labor Board) is up 10.7 per cent from September 1942 to May 1943. But the cost of living is officially calculated to have increased 6.2 per cent in the same period.

National statistics never accurately portray anything more than a cold generalization. Most people think the cost of living, for instance, is up much more than official estimate, which is weighted perhaps with many things they do not buy and cannot get these days.

Also, the wages of many war worker groups are up much more than 10.7 per cent while those of professional, clerical and white collar classes are probably not increased that much.

But officialdom says there is approximately $50,000,000,000 of surplus money in circulation in the United States, and it wants to reach that reservoir of funds. The money, of course, is being spent, in banks, business and pocketbooks. There is no taxation method of its distribution.

The claimant to the new yield is Dr. E. L. Nixon, well known among Fayette county agriculturists, who is now counselor for the Pennsylvania Chain Store Association. He told the Pennsylvania Cooperative Potato Growers Association that tests at Camp Potato, an experimental station near Conduerport, Potter county, showed a variety developed by crossing Rural Russell with the old McCormick would multiply itself fifteen to twenty times when planted.

It is obvious that the Treasury tax program will be viewed in Congress as a rather theoretical ambition. No one there thinks anything like $10,000,000,000 more in money can be raised. It is likely that the bill if finally enacted, will be less than half of the requested amount.

There is one way in which a large amount of new money could be brought in, from the surplus cash reservoir, but it has not much backing. This method, of course, is the sales tax.

Mr. Roosevelt has always shared the common liberal viewpoint that such a tax lays more heavily on the poor than the rich. The fact is it now would catch those who have had the money and are spending it.

In normal times, the liberal argument has a better foundation, but, in these days when the surplus money is largely in the hands of war workers, the liberal position seems to me to be antiquated, however, in view of Mr. Roosevelt's opposition, it cannot be enacted.

Near Endurance Limit

Clearly, the present income, corporation and excise taxes are near the workable endurance limit. You read and hear some liberal and union claims continually that corporations are making big war prof-

Answer to U-Boat Torpedo Menace Is Expected Soon

By DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON, and down of waiting are dramatically illustrated by the latest use of the use by the Nazis of a new underwater torpedo which destroyed ten Allied ships in a recent voyage.

For several weeks of last summer, during which time the American and British peoples knew that the sinkings by submarines had almost ceased, naval men were apprehensive that the full might might preparation for a new offensive by the U-boats. Secretary Knox has issued this warning publicly, and did Prime Minister Churchill. The fact is that the possibility of this weapon being developed which would successfully overcome the American tactics was foreseen here.

By the same token, our scientists and experts who have been trying to stay a lap ahead of the Nazi scientists are presumably working on the antidote to the latest German weapon.

New Carriers Effective

The use of small aircraft carriers from which planes are launched for reconnaissance has been protected by Allied convoys because the airplanes have been able to notify escort vessels of the location of U-boats. Between the attacks from the air and from the surface, the Nazi submarines were driven from the sea.

But during the interval that the have been absent, it is assumed that most of the submarines were recalled to Nazi ports for refueling with new torpedoes or other weapons. Some submarines have stayed on the surface and employed anti-aircraft guns against our planes. Meanwhile, our own bombers have occasionally been diverted from raids inside Germany and have concentrated many attacks on submarine bases in the areas on the Atlantic coast occupied by the Nazis.

Certainly the submarine war is coming to a climax at the same time that the air war is reaching a crisis. The next three to five months may prove to be decisive in the sense of assuring victory over the Nazis in the subsequent military operations, though it is recognized our plans may be considerably delayed by the harassment of our supply lanes over which a heavier and heavier volume of traffic is passing.

Importance Twofold

The importance of U-boat operations is twofold. First, the Nazis realize the vital necessity to them of curtailing our flow of men and supplies to the Mediterranean and Northern European theaters of operation. Second, the knowledge that Allied shipping losses are increasing will be used inside Germany to bolster morale and stimulate the workers on the production front.

Undoubtedly in recent months the German people have been depressed by such news as the Allied victories in North Africa and recently by the surrender of the Italian fleet and the land forces in Southern Italy. The overthrow of Mussolini by the Badoglio government had serious repercussions inside the occupied countries. So anxious have the Nazis been recently to promote some sort of victory that their propagandists seized on the reverses suffered by Allied troops when they landed on the beaches at Salerno. Stories of the evacuation of the Allies in "another Dunkirk" were flashed by the German radios. When later the peoples in the occupied areas learned that the Allies were not defeated but pushed on inside Italy, the German propaganda suffered its worst boomerang this year.

Axix Morale Worsted

The fact is it was really tough-and-go at Salerno, and there was a time when fears were felt that maybe our men would be driven off the beaches. The Germans boasted too soon, and in the end, as the operations became more and more successful for our side and finally occupation of the port of Naples was assured, Axis morale suffered again.

So now it would not be surprising if the Germans exaggerated the effectiveness of their new underwater weapons. This doesn't mean that the convoys haven't been seriously bothered or will not be, but that the tendency of the German propaganda will be to broadcast inside Europe the impression that the U-boat will keep the American military might from reaching Europe in sufficient force to win the war by a big invasion movement.

For Filipino Freedom

From the Pittsburgh Press

Congress should lose no time in passing the Tydings-Bell resolution granting independence to the Philippines now, rather than in 1946 as scheduled. This is desired by both President Roosevelt and President Quezon.

The Filipinos by their heroic defense against the Jap invader earned their right to be treated as a free people. The United States long since proudly recognized that right. Therefore the partnership between the two countries has deepened in spirit under the Japanese challenge to all liberty in the Far East.

The enemy tries to poison the Filipinos against us, telling them we will not keep our promise in 1946 but that Japan will give them freedom. Bataan is the best proof that

Wrong Method

From the Connellsville, Pa., Courier

Social security taxes are the thing when assessed for that specific purpose and within reasonable limits. But when it comes to doing as the Treasury is reportedly suggesting, increasing the tax six-fold as a war-financing measure, it lacks sense. The security side is lost sight of.

Henry Morgenthau has his eyes on that vast potential sum to replenish the war coffers. The ambition is laudable, the method wholly wrong. There is no relation between war financing and social security. War financing is for the emergency; not so, social security.

ASK ADAM

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Adam and Jack had scarcely left Platt's house when Adam found his word with Brenda. "Ready?" he said.

"Ready for what?" said Brenda.

"For me to take you home," he said. "Is that what you're going to do?"

"You'll let me—yes."

"I have my own car here," Adam reminded him. "And it's a way for you to walk back from the garage."

"I'll leave your car in Mrs. Platt's garage," said Adam. "And now I'll drive out for you—bring you in for it. You might be hungry at the cafeteria."

"Very well, I'll try," said Brenda. "I'll be there, though."

"You girl shouldn't mind that," Adam said. "I was thinking of you."

"Thanks," said Adam. "But what are you saying to me more important than retiring early. Besides, I have a definite reason for wanting to be out at your place at a late hour."

"All right. Let's start."

"Platt was willing for Brenda to leave her car, and as soon as she had backed it into the garage, he helped Brenda into his own and they were off."

"I'm waiting," said Brenda, after he had driven some distance. "Is there something important to me?"

"Yes," said Adam. "I'm going to see you."

"What is this anyway?" Brenda asked. "Are you turning the tables on something. People have always asked Adam—and now—"

"And now I'm going to do the same. Do you mind very much?"

"Certainly not. Go on."

"You know that little tower on the hill?" Adam said. "I want to see where you can see for quite a distance around the country."

"Yes, of course. But what on earth do you want to see?"

"I want you to spend a lot of time there, Brenda," Adam went on. "As much time as you can. In fact, if I remember right, the tower is large enough to hold a typewriter table and chair. Wouldn't you do most of your writing up there—glancing up now and then to see what's going on—in the town of the old Johnson farm, distance?"

"And now his great-niece can study more serious things," said Adam. "Here, give me your hand," he said, as they reached their destination. "Don't move until your eyes are accustomed to the darkness."

"Oh, I can see!" said Brenda. "Maybe those stars way up there are helping." She stood in the center of the small room for a moment. "Yes, I could bring my writing up here. And since there are windows on all four sides of the tower, I can keep an eye on north, south, east and west."

"Right!" said Adam. "The Johnson farm is over toward the west. That's the main direction to keep in mind."

"But that big elm tree out there interferes."

"I'll bring a saw out with me tomorrow, and thin out some of the branches. Got a ladder?"

"Yes," said Brenda. "It's in the barn. She sank down upon a narrow window seat and leaned her head back against the facing. "I used to slip up here when I was a little girl and pretend I was a princess—one locked up because she wanted to run off with a knight on a white horse." She paused and turned toward Adam. "Believe it or not, Adam, the knight sometimes resembled you."

"No kidding!" said Adam. "At other times whom did he resemble?"

"Oh, a movie star, or a tennis champion, or a swimming expert," Brenda laughed. "According to who was in the limelight at the time."

"But I was never in the limelight," said Adam. "So how did I happen to rate a thought?"

"I don't know exactly—only Brenda stopped short."

Adam stood looking at her. Her profile was sharply etched against the night—for the darkness of the tower made the outside seem light by comparison. He took a step forward. He stood very close to the girl—looking out toward the river. Presently he reached out and very gently touched Brenda's hair. She reached up and took his hand.

Then suddenly Adam bent and kissed her.

"Why, Adam North!" she gasped.

"Good!" Adam said. "Have you had the telephone connected?"

"It starts working tomorrow," Brenda said. "So Agent PDQ can keep in direct touch with you," she added with a smile.

"Okay, but be careful what you say," Adam warned. "This isn't a game, you know. It's serious."

"I understand," said Brenda. "Now, come on, let's climb up to the tower. I'll get a light."

"No, I'd rather you didn't do that. We'd better go up in the dark. Then we can see better what's going on outside."

"Up and up they went—the flight to the second floor, the flight to a tricky little landing—and then the steps to the tower."

"It was added as an afterthought," said Brenda, "by a great-uncle of mine who was a nature student. He liked to sit in the tower and study the birds and the sky."

"And now his great-niece can study more serious things," said Adam. "Here, give me your hand," he said, as they reached their destination. "Don't move until your eyes are accustomed to the darkness."

"Oh, I can see!" said Brenda. "Maybe those stars way up there are helping." She stood in the center of the small room for a moment. "Yes, I could bring my writing up here. And since there are windows on all four sides of the tower, I can keep an eye on north, south, east and west."

And then she kissed him right back.

Somewhere in the house below a clock struck twice, breaking a stillness that had been oddly thrilling to Adam North. He jumped.

"Gosh!" he said. "If I don't get back to town I won't have time for any sleep before I come back for you."

They went down the steps hand in hand—walking carefully, saying nothing. But when they reached the front porch, Brenda looked up into Adam's face.

"What time shall I expect you?" she asked.

"A little before one," Adam said. "That'll fix it so we can lunch in the cafeteria after the rush hour is over. Okay with you?"

"Anything you say, Adam," Brenda replied.

Adam smiled down at her. "You don't seem a bit like the home-town girl who made good in the big and wicked city," he said.

"What do I seem like?" Brenda said.

"Like the little girl who stayed at home—and waited for her knight," Adam replied.

"Maybe I'm really like that—way down deep," Brenda reached up and patted Adam's cheek. "Trot along home now and get some sleep."

"Good night, Brenda," Adam said, a huskiness in his throat. "And thanks for being such a help."

He ran down the steps. Brenda watched him. Then she turned and walked into the house. In the hall she touched her lips with her fingertips, and remembered Adam's kiss. "I feel like a schoolgirl who has just discovered love and romance," she said to herself.

And then she kissed him right back.

Somewhere in the house below a clock struck twice, breaking a stillness that had been oddly thrilling to Adam North. He jumped.

"Gosh!" he said. "If I don't get back to town I won't have time for any sleep before I come back for you."

They went down the steps hand in hand—walking carefully, saying nothing. But when they reached the front porch, Brenda looked up into Adam's face.

"What time shall I expect you?" she asked.

"A little before one," Adam said. "That'll fix it so we can lunch in the cafeteria after the rush hour is over. Okay with you?"

"Anything you say, Adam," Brenda replied.

Adam smiled down at her. "You don't seem a bit like the home-town girl who made good in the big and wicked city," he said.

"What do I seem like?" Brenda said.

"Like the little girl who stayed at home—and waited for her knight," Adam replied.

"Maybe I'm really like that—way down deep," Brenda reached up and patted Adam's cheek. "Trot along home now and get some sleep."

"Good night, Brenda," Adam said, a huskiness in his throat. "And thanks for being such a help."

He ran down the steps. Brenda watched him. Then she turned and walked into the house. In the hall she touched her lips with her fingertips, and remembered Adam's kiss. "I feel like a schoolgirl who has just discovered love and romance," she said to herself.

Today's VICTORY GARDEN-GRAPH

Fall Care of Asparagus in Victory Garden

By DEAN HALLIDAY

Each year as the roots of asparagus plants develop they should be given generous feedings. Since asparagus is a gross feeder it is almost impossible to overfeed the plants. The ideal time to feed asparagus roots is late in the fall after the stalks have been cut down. To feed the roots spread a heavy layer of manure over the asparagus bed. Early next spring the manure can be worked into the soil on each side of the asparagus rows.

As illustrated in the accompanying Garden-Graph, do not cut down the asparagus stalks until they begin to yellow or the berries have turned red. Cut off the stalks at ground level. If you leave stumps protruding above ground they may harbor the asparagus beetles.

When cutting down the old stalks many seedling plants may be noticed growing in various parts of the bed. These young plants if strong and husky, as illustrated, can be used to start another bed. Weak plants, on the other hand, are not worth transplanting, since they rarely prove satisfactory.

Fire Prevention Week Is Being Observed Here

Death Toll from Flames in America in Last Year Is 10,000 Persons

Fire Prevention week, set on the date of the Chicago fire, is being observed in Cumberland and throughout the nation this week.

As a reminder to local residents to be particularly careful in the prevention of fires, 10,000 leaflets are being distributed throughout the city by boy scouts; one hundred posters have been placed in public buildings, daily radio talks have been arranged from 7:30 to 7:40 p. m., and short moving pictures will be shown at theaters.

Officials of the chamber of commerce, which is sponsoring the local observance, pointed out yesterday that because of the war it is extremely difficult to secure materials with which to make repairs to fire damaged properties.

They added that a water shortage in some sections makes fire protection difficult and explained that a lack of rainfall has made the forests and woodlands unusually subject to fire.

Figures obtained by Harold W. Smith, secretary of the chamber of commerce, showed that 10,000 persons in America lost their lives because of fires last year. "This total, he said, is 2,000 more persons than were killed in action with American troops in the first twelve months of the war, including Pearl Harbor.

In the first two years of the war, the bombing of England, including the attacks on London and Coventry, caused a property damage of $400,000,000, Smith said, but in the same period, fires in America caused property damage of more than $600,000,000.

Smith pointed out that those are impressive figures and urged that everyone be especially careful in preventing fires, not only now but at all times.

Ex-Sailor Is Released From Jail Because of Good War Record

A good war record brought Trevor Jones, Jr., 9 Grand avenue, his freedom from the county jail Saturday, the day after he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment on a charge of larceny.

Jones, who is a veteran of naval action in the Pacific and who was on an American ship sunk by Japanese bombers before receiving a medical discharge from the navy, was accused of taking $6 from the home of Rosalie Gleason in South Cumberland. At his hearing, no mention was made of his service record and the sentence was imposed because of a past police record.

Authorities said if they had known the facts of his military service, leniency would have been shown in the case. When the facts were learned, Jones was ordered released and the case was stricken from the docket.

Dr. A. N. Golladay Is Named Member Of State Board

The governor said both men were endorsed by the Maryland Chiropractic Association, Inc.

Typographical Union Honors T. R. Peterman

Times-News Employee Receives Forty-year Gold Button

Signifying forty years' continuous membership as a member of Cumberland Typographical Union, No. 244, the forty-year gold button was presented to Tolbert Raymond Peterman, 421 Independence street, at a meeting of the union yesterday afternoon. Peterman joined the union on October 3, 1903.

Worked on Courier
Born in Cumberland in 1884, the honored member, a Times-News employee, began his printer's trade in 1899 when he was about 15. At that time he worked on the Courier, a weekly newspaper, of which a lawyer, Edward Johnson, was editor.

After working for the Courier for about three years, Peterman took a job with James A. Young in a job printing establishment on Liberty street, which is now the Cumberland Office Supply Company.

In 1916, having been inducted from the state militia, Peterman served on the Mexican border with the regular army and upon his discharge from the service joined the Daily News Job department where he remained for several years. His next position was as a make-up man on the night side of the Daily News which he followed by a move next door to the Cumberland Press, on Baltimore street.

Joined Times-News in 1938
From the Press he went to the Cumberland Times, then back to the News and finally to the Times-News where he has been employed since 1938. In all of the shops in which he worked, he was made a foreman and is remembered by composing room employees as having discharged only two men during those years.

During his forty years in the union, Peterman has served a vice-president, secretary-treasurer, secretary and sergeant-at-arms. He was also named delegate to two conventions, in Atlantic City, N. J., and Seattle, Wash.

The body will be taken to the home at North Branch today and funeral services will be held Wednesday in Nettie's Hill, W. Va., church. Interment will be in the church cemetery.

State Police Seek Robbers of Two Zihlman Stores

Money and Merchandise Are Stolen from Both County Establishments

State police last night were searching for the thieves who early yesterday morning broke into a Western Maryland railway tool box near Zihlman and then used the tools they stole there to break into the general stores of Mrs. Myra Anderson and Derward Deffenbaugh at Zihlman.

Thefts at both stores were discovered by the proprietors when they opened for business yesterday morning, according to State Trooper Milton Hart who is investigating.

Money, cigarettes and clothing were taken from both establishments by the intruders, Hart said, adding that he does not have accurate estimate of the total loss.

At Anderson's, approximately $35 to $40 was taken from the cash register in addition to cigarettes and clothing. At Deffenbaugh's, the thieves broke into a juke box, took the money from that plus several dollars worth of pennies found in the cash register. Clothing and cigarettes also were taken.

Hart said the thefts occurred sometime after the stores closed at midnight. The thieves, he said, broke into Anderson's store by crawling through a cellar window and then climbing through a trap door to the first floor. At Deffenbaugh's they gained entrance by breaking a padlock and wooden crossbar on a rear door.

Max Hill Relates How the Japs Stifle the Press

By MAX HILL
EDITOR'S NOTE: Max Hill was in Tokyo on the day of Pearl Harbor, and was in prison there for six months after the start of the war. He is the author of "Exchange Ship" and now is on a lecture tour. Hill formerly was the chief of The Associated Press bureau in Tokyo.

Japanese censorship is the strictest in the world, and the government throttles all efforts of newspapers and radio to give the people an accurate picture of what is going on in Japan or elsewhere.

The Japanese have a blind censorship, and it is the worst sort. This is how it worked before the war.

I would write a story addressed to The Associated Press, and file it.

That was the last I ever saw of the message. It went to the censor, who cut out what he wished. I found out what part of my story arrived in America after I received New York, Washington and San Francisco papers a month later.

In America we have a voluntary type of censorship—one in which the newspapers co-operate with our government. In Japan, the government demands this co-operation, and prison is the penalty for those who do not obey.

But Japan even denied there was a censorship.

Another thing. We were able to file from Japan the attitude of the people of Japan prior to the war. But Domei cables, which told of the attitude of the American people, were buried in the official files.

The government said they could not be printed. America read of Japan's determination before Pearl Harbor, but the Japanese never realized that the military of their country were pulling them into a war that would end in disaster.
